

From Monday JULY 27, to Monday AUGUST 3, 1767.

A Voyage round the world, in his Majesty's ship the Dolphin, commanded by the Hon. Commodore Byron. In which is contained, a faithful account of the several places, people, plants, animals, &c. seen on the voyage. By an officer.

ONE important consequence of this voyage, (says the author,) is the putting an end to the dispute, which for two centuries and an half subsisted between geographers, in relation to the reality of the people called Patagonians, of which the concurrent testimony of all on board the Dolphin and Tamar can now leave no room for doubt.

"These were seen by Magellan, whose ship was the first which visited that coast, and who, in 1519, discovered the straits that bear his name: but the writer of that voyage has mingled with his description of them circumstances that are equally fabulous and absurd, and that are only calculated to disguise truth in the habit of fiction.

"These people are afterwards mentioned by Sir Thomas Cavendish, who seems to have seen them only at a distance, and to have judged of their stature by the print of their feet in the sand; for having observed, that they killed two of his people with their arrows, he says they seemed of a gigantic race, the measure of one of their feet being eighteen inches in length. Hence he gave this country the name of Patagonia, by which he meant to signify, that the people were five cubits and an half high."

The present account says, "On our first approaching the coast, evident signs of fear appeared among those in the boat, on seeing men of such enormous size, while some, perhaps to encourage the rest, observed, that those gigantic people were as much surprised at the sight of our muskets, as we were at seeing them, though it is highly probable they did not know their use, and had never heard the report of a gun. But this was sufficient to remind us, that our fire arms gave us an advantage much superior to that derived from height of stature and personal strength.

"After many amicable signs, which appeared equally agreeable to both parties, our Commodore, who had the precaution to take with him on shore a great number of trinkets, such as strings of beads, ribbons, and the like, in order to convince them of our amicable disposition, distributed them with great freedom, giving to each of them some, as far as they went. The method he made use of to facilitate the distribution of them, was by making the Indians sit down on the ground, that he might put the strings of beads, &c. round their necks, and such was their extraordinary size, that in this situation they were almost as high as the commodore when standing.

"They were now so delighted with the different trinkets, which they had an opportunity of viewing, as they hung round their necks, and fell down before on their bosoms, that the commodore could scarcely restrain them from caressing him, particularly the women, whose large and masculine features corresponded with the enormous size of their bodies. Their middle stature seemed to be about eight feet; their extreme nine and upwards; though we did not measure them by any standard, and had reason to believe them rather more than less."

"After we had been with them a short time, they made signs for us to go with them to the smoke which we saw at a distance, and at the same time pointed to their mouths, as if they intended to give us some refreshment: but their number being at present greatly superior to ours, and it being not improbable, that still greater multitudes might come upon us unawares from the inland country, our Commodore, who was equally remarkable for his prudence and his bravery, thought it not advisable to venture any farther from the water-side.

"By the observation we made from the mast head, when we were at about three or four miles distance, and from the smoke we saw rising from different quarters, these Patagonians seemed to have no huts to secure them from the weather; but to be entirely exposed, without so much as a tree of a moderate growth to shelter them. Indeed the soil is in general sandy, and the hills, which are very high, are interspersed with vallies, that to all appearance are barren, for we have found neither water or trees but only a few shrubs,

"We ought not to omit, that the greatest part of those who surrounded us on the shore, were, before our landing, on horseback; but on seeing us make up to them, they dismounted, and left their horses at some distance. These horses seemed to be about sixteen hands high, and very swift; but bore no proportion to the size of their riders, and seemed to be but in a poor condition.

"At length, after making signs that we would depart, with the most plausible promises, by our gestures, of returning to them again from the ship, we left these Patagonian Indians, who were so distressed and afflicted at our leaving them, that we heard their cries for a considerable time after."

PHILADELPHIA FLOUR and BAR IRON, TO BE SOLD,

The affairs of Corsica being at present a sub- ject of dispute, we have inserted the follow- ing Life of King THEODORE, from the Supplement, or thirteenth volume of The Biographical Dictionary, lately published.

THEODORE I King of Cordia, Baron New- holt, Grandee of Spain, Baron of England, Peer of France, Baron of the Holy Empire, Prince of the Papal Throne: For thus he styled himself. "A man whose claim to Royalty," says an ingenious Author, "was as indubitable as the most ancient ti- tles to any Monarchy can pretend to be; that is, the choice of his subjects; the voluntary election of an injured people, who had the common right of man- kind to freedom, and the uncommon rebellion of determining to be free."

It was on March the 15th, 1736, whilst the Cor- sican M. I contents were sitting in Council, that an En- glish vessel from Tunis, with a prisoner from cap- tured Corsica, arrived at a port, then in posses- sion of the Malcontents. A stranger on board this ves- sel, who had the appearance of a person of distinction, no sooner went on shore, but he was received with singular honours by the principal persons, who salu- ted him with the titles of Excellency, and Viceroy of Corsica. His attendants, consisted of two Officers, a Secretary, a Chaplain, a few domestics, and Morisco- slaves. He was conducted to the Bishop's palace; called himself Lord Theodore; Whilst the Chiefs knew more about him than they thought convenient to declare. From the vessel that brought him, were despatched ten pieces of cannon, 400000 shells, great quantities of provisions, and coin to the amount of 200,000 ducats.

Two (1000) of cannon were placed before his door, and he had 400 soldiers posted for his guard. He created Officers, formed 24 companies of soldiers; distributed among the Malcontents the arms and the money he had brought with him. He named Kuth- hood on one of the Chiefs, appointed another his Treasurer, and professed the Roman Catholic reli- gion. Various conjunctures were formed in different Courts concerning him; the eldest son of the Pri- tender, Prince Rasputi, the Duke de Elperder, Comte de Bonnaville, were each in their turns sup- posed to be this stranger; all Europe was puzzled; but the country of our stranger was soon discovered: He was in fact a Prussian, well known by the name of Theodore Aubrey, Baron of Newholt.

Theodore was a Knight of the Teutonic Order, had successively been in the service of several Ger- man Princes, had been Holland, England, France, Portugal; gained the confidence of the great at Lis- bon; and passed there a Charge d'affaires from the emperor. This extraordinary man, with an ex- traordinary person; had insatiable strong natural parts, and was capable of any enterprise. He was about fifty years of age. Upon his first landing, the Chiefs of the Corsicans publicly declared to the people, that it was to him they were to be indebted for their li- berty, that he was come in order to deliver them from the tyrannical oppression of the Genoese. The General Assembly elected him the crown, not as any sudden act into which they had been hurried; but with all the precaution that people could take to se- cure their freedom, and stability under it. Theodore, however contented himself with the title of Governor General, 1. this quality he ascribed to the people, and administered an oath for preserving eternal peace among themselves; and severely did he ex- d obedi- ence to this law.

He was again elected the title of King. He accepted it, Sunday, April the 15th, 1736, was crowned King of Corsica, and received the oath of fidelity from his principal subjects, and acclamations of all the people. The Genoese, alarmed at these proceedings, publicly declared him and his adherents guilty of high treason; & evoked it to be reported that he governed in the most despotical manner, even to the putting to death many principal inhabitants, merely be- cause they were Genoese; than which nothing could be more false, as appears from his Manifesto, in answer to the Edict. Theodore, however, having not toge- ther near 25000 men, found himself master of a country where the Genoese durst not appear; he carried Porto Vecchio; and on May the 3d, block- ed up the city of Bastia, but was soon obliged to re- tire. He then separated his forces, and then was suc- cessful in his conquests, and came to a before Bastia, which soon submitted to him. His Court be- came brilliant, and he conferred titles of Nobility upon his principal Courtiers.

Towards the month of July murmurs were spread of great dissatisfaction arising from the want of The- odore's promised succours. On the other hand, a considerable armament sailed from Barcelona, as was supposed in his favour. At the same time France and England strictly forbade their subjects to assist in any way the Malcontents. September the 2d, Theodore presided at a General Assembly, and assured his subjects anew of the speedy arrival of the much wanted succours. Debates ran high, and Theodore was given to understand, that before the end of October, he must resign the sovereign autho- rity, or make good his promise. Theodore, in the mean time received large sums, but nobody knew from whom they came: He armed some barbs, and shifted the face of the Genoese which lay near the island. He now instituted the order of Deliverance, in me- mory of his delivering the country from the dominion of the Genoese. The month he had a dividend paid to be new coined, and his officers formed to have a promising aspect; but the scene presently changed.

In the beginning of November he assembled the Chiefs, and declared that he would not keep them any longer in a state of uncertainty, their fidelity, and confidence demanding of him the utmost efforts in their favour: That he had determined to send out in person the succours he had so long expected. The Chiefs assured him of their determined adherence to his interests. He named the principal among them to take the government in his absence, made all the necessary provisions, and recommended to them to be on the strong terms. The Chiefs, to the number of forty-seven, attended him with the utmost respect on the day of his departure, to the water-side, and even on board his vessel; where, as he affectionately embraced them, he took his leave, and they returned on shore, and went in quest of their respective posts, which he had assigned them: A demonstration of this, that he was not forced out of the island, did not quit it in disgust, nor leave it in a manner inconsistent with his royal character.

Thus ended the reign of Theodore, who arrived in a few days, disguised in the habit of an Alibi, at Livonia, and from thence, after a short stay, conveyed himself nobody knew whither. The next year, however, he appeared at Paris; was ordered to depart the kingdom in forty-eight hours; he precipitately embarked at Rouen, and arrived at Amsterdam, attended by four Italian domesticks; took up his quarters at an inn, and there two days as arrested him, on a claim of 20,000 livres. But he soon obtained a passport, and found some near-chiefs who engaged to furnish him with a great quantity of ammunition for his faithful followers. He accordingly went on board a frigate of 55 guns, and 250 men; but was soon afterwards, with two of his relations, seized at Naples, in the house of the Dutch Consul, and sent prisoner to the fortress of Corsica.

This unhappy monarch, whose courage had raised him to a throne, not by a succession of bloody acts, but by the free choice of an oppressed nation, for many years struggled with fortune, and left no means untried, with indefatigable policy, or solicitation of favours could attempt, to recover his crown. At length he chose for his retirement a country, where he might enjoy the participation of that liberty which he had so vainly endeavoured to fix to his Corsicans; but his situation here, by degrees, grew wretched, and he was reduced to low spirits, as he felt several years before his death, a prisoner for debt in the King's Bench.

Theodore was a friend of his in London, as an instance of the reputation of mankind, that there was a very high opinion in Corsica, which was carefully avoided, from a long received opinion, that, whoever abandoned it, would be no happy and unsuccessful in all his future undertakings. Theodore, in order to convince them of the wrongness of such a belief, in spite of all their remonstrances, insisted on climbing the fatal mountain; on the top of which he found a barren plain, and a great quantity of game, and so tame, that he could take them in his hands. However, amidst such opinions, this King's future life did not, I believe, cure the Corsicans of their credulity.

To the honour of some private persons, a charitable contribution was raised for him in 1753. And in 1757, at the expense of a Gentleman, a marble was erected to his memory in the church-yard of St. Anne's, Westminster, with the following inscription:

Near this place is interred
Theodore King of Corsica,
Who died in this parish Dec. 11, 1756.

Immediately after leaving
The King's Bench Prison
By the Ben. J. of the Act of Insolvency:
In consequence of which,
He resigned his Kingdom of Corsica
For the use of his creditors.

The grave, great teacher, to a level by sea,
Rocks and begonia, gilly flowers and Kings;
But Theodore's moral is: he is dead,
Fate pour'd its lesson on his living head,
Behold a kingdom, and deny'd him here.

Further Extract from A Voyage round the World.

Account of two of the four islands discovered in the South Sea.

ON the 11th of June, at six o'clock in the afternoon, the Tamar made the signal for seeing land, on which we lay too all night, and the next morning running along the shore to find a place to anchor in, we stood into a bay, with an intent to come too; but there being no soundings at a greater distance than half a cable's length from the shore, the commodore would not venture to cast anchor, but made sail again to the westward; however, the boats going again to sound, saw two canoes full of men, on which the commodore made the signal for the boats to give chase; but as one in the afternoon the canoes took to the shore, and the men, with their sticks and staves defended the beach, till our boats were, in their own defence, obliged to fire, by which several of them were killed, or at least wounded, and carried away by their companions into the woods. The boats returning on board, brought the two canoes with them, one of which was thirty-one feet in length, and the other only fourteen.

After dispersing these Indians, we went on shore to procure some refreshments, when we saw many of their huts, which are in general but very low, with the top like the roof of a house covered with matting. We here gathered a great number of cocoa-nuts which seem to be the principal produce of the island, and among the rest a large quantity of curvy grass, and other vegetables, for the use of our sick. For as the ship could not cast anchor, the sick were not sent ashore.

This island is all round next the sea covered with very beautiful red and white coral, with a great quantity of pearls, and a multitude of fine shells; hence we gave it the name of Coral Island. It is about ten or eleven leagues in length, and near three in breadth; but there is very little fresh water to be found near the shore; we saw only one spring just sufficient for the use of a small number of the inhabitants; and it appeared that they were accustomed to fetch their water from this spring, and to deposit it in a cavity dug at the foot of a tree, in order to supply their present occasions. There is, however, a lake in the middle of the island, where the Indians catch turtle, and we saw a great number of their shells, which they use in narrow slips along the seams of their canoes, instead of caulking. We found great quantities of fish hanging on the limbs of trees to dry, which they catch with pearl hooks, and strong lines made of silk grass. These people seem to have some notions of religion, as we saw a place which we concluded to be appropriated to their worship. A rude but very agreeable avenue opened to a spacious area, in which was one of the largest and most spreading cocoas we saw in the place, before which were several large stones, which were probably altars, and from the tree hung the figure of a dog adorned with feathers. These people seem to have a notion of keeping above ground the bodies of their dead; for behind these stones, and a little towards the eastward, was a wooden box, in which we found the skeleton of a human being, who appeared to have been of an enormous size.

On the 4th of July the Tamar, making the signal for seeing land in degrees, thirteen minutes south latitude, and in west longitude degrees forty minutes; and it being never before discovered, we gave it the name of Byron Island. It is near four leagues from north-west to the south-east, and being covered with a great number of trees, appears very fruitful. To the south-west of the island you may anchor from ten fathoms water to thirty-seven, in a coral bottom, half a mile from the shore, where there is little or no surf. At ten in the morning we sent our boat armed on shore, at which time we saw a multitude of inhabitants, provided with a kind of proas or Indian boats, scattered on different parts of the shore. On our boat's approaching the land, the Indians came alongside them, and trafficked with our men, who gave them several trinkets in exchange for their fruit and other things; and they seemed to be highly delighted both with what they received, and the courteous behavior of the sailors. Their boats are small, and covered with leaves of trees sewed together: some of them carrying four people, and others only two.

These Indians are of an olive colour, and have fine long black hair, and their teeth remarkably white. They are well made, and have fruit limbs, and great activity. The men were entirely naked, and though we saw upwards of an hundred of them in their proas, there was but one woman among them; and of her they seemed to take great notice; she was distinguished by wearing something about her waist. While the proas were round the ship, one of the Indians came on board, and by his manner of sitting on the deck, seemed to be more used to sitting than standing; for he instantly squatted down on his hams, and did not quit that posture till he jumped overboard.

JOHN HILL.

A List of Dr. Hill's Medicines sold by Messrs. CARNE & WILSON.

1. PECTORAL BALSAM OF HONEY.

These complaints are so common, that no family should be without the medicine.

the certain cure of the scurvy, and all crasings out,
it never once failed in many thousand instances.

3. TINCTURE OF CENTAURY, A

stomachic bitter, that gives a healthy appetite and found digestion. A certain cure for all weakneses and disorders in the stomach.

4. ELIXIR OF BARDANA, For the gon, and rheumatism. This re-establishes the health after the flux of the gon, it runs such as follow, and eases the pain. For the rheumatism it is a certain cure, and the disease never returns.

5. TINCTURE OF SAGE, To lengthen

life, and keep off the decays of age; as tremblings, dizziness, and all other the weaknesses of an advanced life.

6. TINCTURE OF VALERIAN, For disorders of the nerves, low spirits, faintness, headaches, and all kinds of fits.

All these are pleasant, innocent and efficacious medicines, discovered by the author in the course of his study of plants, and so safe, that infants may take any of them in a proper dose.

bered, one like 53, one like R

CHARLES-TOWN, August 3, 1767.

THE gang of villains from Virginia and North-Carolina, who have for some years past, in small parties, under particular leaders, infested the back parts of the southern provinces, stealing horses from one, and selling them in the next, notwithstanding the less public examples made of several of them, we hear, are more formidable than ever as to numbers, and more audacious, and cruel in their thefts and outrages. The report, that they consist of more than two, forms a chain of communication with each other, and have places of general meeting, where (in imitation of councils of war) they form plans of operation and fidelity to each other, call those places Free-Masons Lodges. Influence of their cruelty to the people in the back settlements, whom they rob or otherwise abuse, are so numerous and shocking, that a narrative of them would fill a whole gazette, and every reader with horror. They at present range in the Forks between Broad, Saluaty, and Savannah Rivers. Two of the gang were hanged last week at Savannah, viz. Leady Bull, and Obadiab Greenway. Two others, John Forsgren and Yaffi Hamerlan, were killed, when those were taken.

The last letters from East-Florida advise, that the different garisons in that province continue perfectly healthy, and that Mr. Fyffe, surgeon-major to the 9th regiment, is appointed adjutant thereof, in the room of the late Lieut. Sharp.

The many plans forming and carrying into execution for extending the inland navigation in Great-Britain, is a good example for us, and very well worth imitation in this province, where from the numerous rivulets and creeks that are interspersed throughout the country, such improvements may be made with great ease, & at a considerable less expence; for instance, by a cut of only five miles, as we are informed, a communication may be formed between Santee and Cooper Rivers, the advantages that would arise from which are too obvious to need mentioning here.

Last Tuesday evening, one Sullivan a ship-carpenter, was shot through the body and killed on the spot, on the high road, about half a mile without the town, by one Floyd a Clock-maker. The jury of inquest brought in their verdict wilful murder, and Floyd is committed to jail, to be tried at next October sessions.

The Mail for Great Britain, to go by his Majesty's Packet Boat the Grenville, commanded by Capt. John Siddall, was closed at the general post-office, last Friday evening, and said Packet Boat only waits for a wind to put to sea.

Monday last Mr. Francis Varambaur, was married to Miss La Tour.

There is no variation in the price current of produce, since the last publication.

BARBADOS, June 13.

The Speech of his Excellency General MELVILL to the House of Assembly in St. Vincent, the 12th of May, 1767.

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

IT is with the highest Satisfaction I this day view the happy Completion of the Legislature of this Colony, under the Auspices and by the Authority of our most excellent Sovereign: And I fully confide that your faithful Attachment to his Majesty's Love for our Mother-Country. Unanimity among yourselves, and Harmony with the other Branch of Legislature, for promoting the true Honour and Interest of this Colony, will prove fully correspondent to so invaluable a Blessing.

I will not detain you longer, Gentlemen, but to be omitted to your earliest Consideration some of the Points which seem most particularly to require it.

To appoint some fit Person residing in London for soliciting the royal Confirmation of the Laws, and for obtaining other Advantages to this Infant Colony.

To improve and support the Police by good and wholesome Laws, not only respecting all the free Inhabitants, but their Slaves and other Persons.

To render healthy and convenient, as far as possible the Town of Kingston, the present Capital of this Island.

To facilitate the Communication around the cultivated Parts of the Island by proper Roads.

And, lastly, to make some proper provisions not only for the discharge of such just and necessary public debts as may have been already incurred, but for defraying with due frugality such other public charges as may seem at this time to be most indispensable.

Signed, ROBERT MELVILL.

To his Excellency ROBERT MELVILL, Esq. Captain-General, and Governor in Chief in and over all his Majesty's Southern Caribbean Islands in America, &c. &c. &c.

The humble ADDRESS of the Assembly of the Island of St. Vincent.

May it please your Excellency,

WE the representatives of the people of St. Vincent, beg leave to return your Excellency our most hearty and unfeigned thanks for the speech your Excellency was pleased to make to us when last we had the honour of attending your board, and for the satisfaction your Excellency was there pleased to express at the completion of the legislature of this Colony, by the authority of our most excellent Sovereign, whose great virtues are so apparently reflected by our Excellency in all your Acts of representation, that we (even at a distance from his sacred person) enjoy every blessing a Briton's free and sanguine spirit can suggest, under the auspices of the most benign and gracious King. Thus circumstanced, your Excellency may be assured your confidence in our duty and attachment to his Majesty, and our love for the mother-country, is not ill placed. Nor do we doubt but that (from the concord which has hitherto prevailed in the Island by the total absence of parties and faction among us) we shall preserve the greatest unanimity among ourselves, as well as harmony with the other branch of legislature; as we are well assured that our views are equally concerned in the promotion of the true honour and interest of this colony.

The debt which this Island is involved in, from the want of a means heretofore of raising supplies, shall be one of the first objects of our attention, and a proper fund shall be speedily raised for its discharge. The several other objects of your excellency's recommendation shall be attended to, and every dispatch in our power used towards the effecting the salutary and desirable ends which must arise from their accomplishment.

The fear of giving an offence to a modesty which always accompanies true merit, happily restrains us from attempting to express the sense we have of the whole of your excellency's conduct towards us; as we should despair of doing justice to your excellency, or to our sentiments, by any sentences within our conception: But however, whilst we congratulate ourselves on the choice his majesty has been graciously pleased to make of your excellency for our commander in chief, we must beg leave to offer our acknowledgements for your excellency's great care of and attention to this colony; the good and lasting effects of which will be a monument of honour to your excellency, admiration to posterity, and (we hope) of emulation to your successors. Long, Sir, may you govern us.

Signed, C. P. SHARPE, Speaker.

To which his excellency was pleased to return the following answer.

Mr. Speaker, and gentlemen of the assembly,

I Return you my most hearty thanks for the very cordial and respectful address you have presented to me; and you may entirely rely on my most zealous sentiments for the true honour and prosperity of St. Vincent.

Since our last arrived here his Majesty's ship Phoenix, Capt. Lambert, from the coast of Africa, and on Thursday the 14th again for Jamaica. Tuesday morning arrived here in the Majesty's ship the Lark, Captain Faulkland, from St. Vincent, this Excellency Robert Melvill, Captain-General, Governor and commander in chief in and over the southern Caribbean Islands of Grenada, the Grenadines, Dominica, St. Vincent and Tobago. His excellency was saluted on his landing by a general discharge of the cannon from the Lark, the government ship Grenville, and the battery on shore, where he was received by many of the principal inhabitants, and his Majesty's troops in garrison, &c.

His Majesty has been pleased to appoint Lieutenant Henry Harnage to be a Captain in the 63d regiment of foot, in the room of Captain Arthur Saint George preferred.

KINGSTON, (in Jamaica) June 20.

Monday last died Mr. John M'Cann, Printer of this town; and the next day his remains, followed by a great number of his friends, were decently interred. The company of the light infantry, (of which he was a member) also attended the corps to the grave, with music playing in a solemn manner; after which they fired three volleys; and concluded the ceremony.

JUNE 27.

Wednesday last, the most ancient and honourable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons, celebrated the high Festival of St. John Baptist in the following manner—About ten in the morning the Brethren of five regular lodges, with the officers and members of the grand lodge, met at the house of brother John Rawleigh, from whence they proceeded in ample form to church, where a most excellent sermon was preached before them, by the Rev. brother Gideon Caffelfranch A. M. The church service being ended, they went to Vaux hall, where an entertainment was prepared, and the brethren dined together with the greatest harmony. The right worshipful provincial grand master, was pleased to nominate the right worshipful Daniel Brodbelt, Esq; his successor, who as a true and faithful brother most kindly accepted, was proclaimed aloud, and installed provincial grand master of Masons, in the Island of Jamaica, for the ensuing year.—In the evening there was a magnificent ball, which was honoured with the appearance of near four hundred ladies and gentlemen, who were well pleased with the decorum and regularity observed by this most ancient and honourable society.
